Excerpt: .showed some form of crossing signs, 7 of them showing wig-wag, swinging pendulum type signals. These signs are, in most cases, operated by track circuits, which are closed by the movement of a train onto the track within the limits fixed by the bonding of the rails for that purpose. The closing of the track circuit releases the operating mechanism of the signal, resulting in the display of a red light in the center of the pendulum and the swinging of it back and forth to the accompaniment of the ringing of a crossing bell, the operation continuing until the train passes out of the bonded section of track. One type of crossing signal was so constructed that when a train entered the block, a board was displayed bearing the word, Stop, and when the block was cleared, the stop sign was lifted from...
