The portmanteau, the walking-stick, and the pantaloons, strapped tight about his legs, like those of a traveler who goes far, brings to mind the myth of Osiris, at the period of his peregrination. Has this statue some relation with that celebrated divinity of Ethiopic origin who, among the Egyptians, presided at the worship of the dead? That there was a connection in Ancient American races with Ethiopia is shown by the traditions among the Incan and even pre-Incans. Coast myths of America acknowledge the fact of great Ethmic invasions. Gomara relates that the great God Cou came from the north, creating men, and that after him followed the god Pachacama, who banished Cou and turned his people into cats, and other black animals, and created new populations. All the ancient kings of Peru long before...
