Excerpt: . DICTION. 95. Diction treats of the correct use of words and phrases. In speaking and writing, such words should be chosen as will make our meaning clear; and their arrangement should be in accordance with the peculiar construction of the language. 96. We must be on our guard against using, --1. Foreign words and constructions. 2. Obsolete words and newly coined words. 3. Too many Latinized or high-sounding words. 4. Slang words and expressions. 5. Uncommon and technical words. 6. Abbreviations. If language is in conformity with the above, the diction is said to be pure. 97. When words are employed carelessly, and do not convey the meaning that is intended, the diction is said to lack propriety. 98. Frequently, in English, several words possess about the same meaning and are therefore called synonyms. These synonyms, however, are not always interchangeable, and when...
