Commission on Civil Rights, 2002- LC Number: KF3464. 15 . U78 2003 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)50679061 Subject: Administrative agencies -- Officials and employees -- United States. Excerpt: . . . 1 Chapter 1: Introduction Historically, and to this day, people of color, those with disabilities, and other marginalized Americans have looked to the federal government to redress wrongs committed against them while seeking equal access to quality education, health care, and housing, and fair treatment in employment. Whether the government has appropriately responded to the public's trust is the source of countless studies, including the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights own. Even so, federal agencies have been mandated to enforce civil rights laws passed to protect individuals denied equal protection on account of their race, color, religion, sex, age, national origin, disability, and familial status. With the force of civil rights laws, the federal government has scored significant victories since the 1960s. Over the past 10 years, as a part of its fact-finding mission, the Commission published 16 reports that evaluated 11 federal agencies and offered more than...
